DEAR DIAMOND LIL

How are our affairs going these days? Or, are we the lacking ones? Have we been able to become very close to anyone or make any new friends? Have we been accepting of someone else even though they might not be quite up to our standards? Have we been placing too much value on externals and accessories again? And, have we overlooked the beauty of someone's soul? Children, now that it's magnolia time again, why not stop for a few moments and enjoy the sweet fragrance? Better still, why not pen a note to Dear Diamond Lil, c/o Cruise Weekly, 729 Piedmont Ave. NE, Atlanta, GA 30308, thus cleansing your being by flushing out old residue that might be causing some unnecessary unpleasanties.

Dearest Diamond,

After countless personal consultations with you concerning the myriad problems involved with gay relationships, I would like to share with you some good news.

Today, my lover & I celebrate our 8th month anniversary together. A goodly portion of the credit must go to you—for it was your wisdom and advice which helped us overcome the everyday problems involved in such relationships.

Other than to thank you personally for your advise and counseling, a message to your readers is also in order: Relationships can and do work—the only ingredients being trust, desire, and hard work.

Your admirers and friends,

Dear A.E. & L.L.,

Thank you so much for your very encouraging message and compliments. I am glad that in some way I have been a part in assisting in making things easier for you.

May I add that relationships work better with trust, desire, and hard work. It's the "hard-work bit" that seems to cause us the most stress, I feel.

Yours in love and joy,
Diamond Lil

Dear Diamond Lil,

I have written this letter numerous times only to never make it as far as the mailbox. But this time I am determined to get the letter in the mail.

After breaking up with a lover of five years, I decided to move to Atlanta. I don't know, maybe I was running away from the problem as I was still very much in love with him, but we just could no longer go on together. It has taken me almost a year to get over my feelings for him, but I am now over him. The problem is that I have been removed from the dating scene so long I am very ill at ease trying to meet someone new. I am somewhat shy so meeting a new man is difficult in the bar arena. But I am very much looking for someone to share my life. I am prepared for a nice courtship and dating period, but I do want someone to share my time. I am not looking for love at first sight or any instant love as I know all too well that a lasting relationship takes time.

I feel like I have a lot to offer that special man. I am a graduate student at Georgia State, have a full time job as an Administrative Assistant to the President of a large Atlanta firm. I have my own car and own apartment. I am very giving warm and loving. I love people and having a good time. I am just very lonely! I am 30 years old, 6'2", 170#, blond hair, blue eyes, and a fairly nice body. I enjoy theatre, dance, and music. I like movies, simple pleasures, and evenings at home. I enjoy going to the bars to dance and socialize with friends, but detest the one night stands and casual relationships associated with the bar scene.

Diamond Lil, please do me a favor and help me out by printing this in your column and directing any interested men between 20 and 29 my way. I do appreciate and admire the service you render so gracefully to your community. Your example of unselfish giving and loving is a fine example for our peers and for community members. Lastly, I want to say thank you for your honest, sound and understanding advice given in such a dedicated fashion.

Thank you for your help!

Love,
C.A.T.

Dear C.A.T.,

With your most lovely note and description, would you be offended if I, myself, applied for such an attractive position? I must be honest, however, I am a year or two older than 29; but I am famous and do still find a naked light bulb offensive. In the meantime, I'll, of course, gladly forward any and all other messages to you from our readers.

Sweetheart, although I have a tendency to have a special affection for any and all of the people who write to me and they all have their special meaning to me, the editors of Cruise are asking that I suggest that letters with requests and problems similar to yours in the future be placed under "Personals" in the Weekly. We receive so many letters like yours that it's beginning to seem unfair that we don't have the space to print them all here. I'm understanding our "Personals" do get good results, so, children, do not fret! With love and some great new friendships,

Diamond Lil

P.S. Even though you haven't asked, I still have your name on my fan for the next dance. D.L.

GETTING SUPPORT: WHO CAN WE TURN TO?

There's no doubt that it's important to take responsibility for our own lives. There's no doubt that physical health is a vital part of this responsibility, and that each of us is primarily responsible for his or her own body, but human beings are independent only to a point.

We are social beings. Study after study—personal experience after personal experience—all demonstrate that people are happier and healthier with the emotional support of others than they can ever be without it.

Loneliness can be insidious. How often have we heard someone say, "I never realized then how lonely I was!" At the same time, one's state of mind can definitely affect one's physical feelings. How often have we met someone who made us feel like a new man or woman? Falling in love is well known to make people feel strong and radiant with energy and well-being. And we all know that the loss of one we care for can make us physically sick.

What's in our minds is never "just" in our minds. Stress is the best example.

When we are frustrated or angry or anxious, our physical response to that stress depends not on the amount of stress but on how well we cope with it. And we cope better if we have a good support network.

Lovers and close friends are important—they are our first line of support. But it's risky to depend on one person or a couple of people for all our support. That person or couple of people may not be there forever, just as we may not be there forever for them.

One source of support—and a chance to talk things out—is the Atlanta Gay Helpline which operates daily from 6pm to 11pm at 892-0661.

Another is a network of good friends. It has been said that in this culture, deep friendship is considered threatening for non-gays—particularly non-gay men—and that gay men are able to have more numerous close friendships than non-gays. If there is some truth to this, it is probably because gay people have always required the support of friendship to cope with the stress of oppression.

Organizations can also provide support. Many lesbians and gay men have sought out others with similar interests to form organizations of sports enthusiasts, feminists, the politically minded—and so many others. Cruise lists many such organizations and details are available from the Atlanta Gay Helpline.

Religion, which has been the cause of so much suffering among gay men and lesbians, has also been a source of strength and a sense of worth and well-being for many. Gay religious organizations represent practically every traditional faith. Each has acted as a conscience within its tradition to confront dogmas against homosexual behavior, which are largely the result of political and social forces in history rather than authentic theology. The religious organizations of our community have demonstrated to many lesbians and gay men that they are no less children of God because they have chosen to be honest about their sexuality. Many of us were truly free to come out to other people only after we had come out to God and to ourselves.

Families are the most basic traditional source of emotional support, but not all families need be traditional "nuclear" families. Gay men and lesbians often congregate in family units of caring and support. Also, fewer of us than ever really face the prospect of being cut off forever from our natural families.

Not everyone requires the same kind of support network, but all of us could benefit from more information about coping strategies and the various options we can choose to live life to its fullest.

That's why the series of workshops scheduled for June 23 is called "Options '84." Next week we'll be more specific with an article about the actual workshops and issues that Options '84 plans to cover.
