"THE ROSE EXTERMINATOR"

by William Carney

Carney. Again, it became a classic among devotees of S&M. Now, eight years later, his third novel, "The Rose Exterminator," has been published and will certainly be praised by those who have been waiting for these many years for a new Carney novel.

What is so interesting about "The Rose Exterminator" is that it is the same tale as Carney told in "The Real Thing" - only this time it is told from the viewpoint of Scott, the only man who Symonds ever loved. While this may take a couple of plot twists out of the book for those familiar with Carney's first novel, fans of "The Real Thing" will find the change in perspective fascinating. And those who have not read the first novel will not be at any disadvantage when reading "The Rose Exterminator"; it is a work complete unto itself. The new reader might be motivated to try and find the first book (currently out of print) after finishing this one to see how Symonds himself felt about the events and activities leading up to his death.

In "The Rose Exterminator," Scott sets out to find his friend Eugene Carmichael, in whose trailer Symonds' body had been found hanging upside down, bound in leather and chains, the subject of an attempted castration, with the remains of a cyanide capsule in his mouth. Feeling that Eugene was incapable of murdering Symonds (who was Eugene's master at the time), Scott spends his weekend searching for clues as to Eugene's whereabouts and the identity of the real murderer. His search takes him on a trip through the gay S&M world of the 1960s, a world he is already familiar with as an observer through his seven-year relationship with Symonds.

Although it is a murder mystery of sorts, "who did it" is not the prime focus of the book. Rather, Scott's reflections, reminiscences, and observations as he searches for Eugene and tries to sort out what really happened to Symonds make "The

"The Rose Exterminator," by William Carney. Everest House, c/o Dodd, Mead & Company, Inc., 79 Madison Ave., New York, NY 10016. Publication: October, 1982. Price: 14.95.

In 1968, William Carney's first novel, "The Real Thing," was published and immediately became a cult classic with those involved in the S&M scene. It related the story of Glenn Symonds, plastic surgeon of great renown, who was the most highly regarded master in Southern California's gay S&M world in the mid-1960s. It told Symonds' story using the device of letters written by Symonds himself - letters which detailed his observations and feelings about his life up to the time of his murder.

In 1974, his second novel, "A Year in the Closet," was greeted with great enthusiasm by his fans who were waiting patiently for another tale from Rose Exterminator" more a psychological study of the gay S&M world of the time. It deals with the needs and feelings which drive people to participate in this activity. It is ultimately a novel about love and about the destruction sometimes wrought in the pursuit of love.

This is not to imply that there is no element of suspense or mystery in the story — there is. The reader is held in suspense until the end as to how Symonds was actually killed, and there are some surprising twists in both the plot and in the relationships of the characters to each other. Moreover, while the book deals with the world of gay S&M, it is not a work full of detailed narrations of the sexual activities of its characters. In fact, there are really only two sex scenes in the book, and neither would be termed "erotic" in the true sense of the word. They really serve to provide further insight into the psychology of the characters rather than being designed to titillate the reader.

Carney is both an incisive and masterful storyteller. His observation on some of the sexual symbolism involved in the world of S&M (such as a brief dissertation on the use and symbolism of keys) are brilliant. His analysis of the S&M world and psychology of those involved show that Carney is well acquainted with this world first-hand — no outside observer could have his insights — but the novel itself is not autobiographical. His feelings about gay S&M today, however, are not the same as his feelings about that world as it existed two decades ago. As one of his characters, Faulkner, states at the end of the book, "It's not the same, you know ... Leather is in, and everybody's into it. It's not what it used to be ... There's no concentration or quietness in it anymore ... It's all a parody."

"The Rose Exterminator" is an excellently written mystery which is a must-read for anyone interested in the psychology of the gay S&M world.

Lonely? Depressed? Not feeling fulfilled? Is your self-esteem mirrored by people around you and not by your own self-worth? Counseling with James L. Halliwill at 972 Peachtree Street, NE, will equip you with the tools to develop a healthy and emotionally secure self.

If you're having complications with your sexual identity because of inner turmoil, Jim Halliwill can help you extinguish that turmoil and resolve those complications. If you have problems with homosexuality because of societal views, Mr. Halliwill will work with you to see that it is society that has the problems and not you.

Jim Halliwill at telephone 404 876-5356 can assist you with personal relationships. Lonely, even in a crowd of gorgeous people? Are your relationships ephemeral? Based mostly on the sexual? Even if you think you won't ever be able to find a permanent relationship — a relationship constructed on sincerity and love, be satisfied and let Jim Halliwill improve your record. That perfectly beautiful relationship is possible with counseling from Jim Halliwill. Don't delay! You've suffered long enough. Call Jim today for a healthy and happy personal world of self fulfillment.

THE ELECTION & GAY ATLANTA

Mid-term election results are always difficult to analyze and I am no political pundit. However, several definites are obvious: Millionaires won over poorer opponents; The three female senatorial and two female gubernatorial candidates all lost; Bachelors were defeated (Jerry Brown in California and Ed Koch in New York; both have been rumored gay); and although political mavericks and "professional" Liberals such as Lowell Weicker (R-Conn), Patrick Moynihan (D-NY) and Ted Kennedy (D-Mass) retained their seats, power, influence and glamor, in the South moderates were swamped by rabid "Conservatives."

The voters who preferred George Wallace, Joe Frank Harris, James Webb and Larry MacDonald to more moderate alternative candidates sent out a very strong and frightening message.

Gays need to take heed.

Atlantans who lived through the "bad old times" think the current liberality makes Atlanta a Gay Paradise and they resent anyone who tells them otherwise. Transplants from New York or other supposed "Gay" metropolises view laid-back, no-hassle Atlanta as Heaven-on-Earth and see no reason to get involved.

But Southern tolerance for eccentricity has its limits. Voting to allow liquor sales on Sundays is voting from the wallet: The election of Wallace, Harris, Webb and MacDonald was gut-reaction stuff and packs a potent warning to Gays.

Given our numbers and the way we spend money, Gay Atlanta should have several "gay" seats on the City Council NOW! We should have a Mayor who listens to us instead of to god. We should have the Police Commissioner coming to us! It's very nice to have drag races out in the open, but it doesn't mean dork politically. I'm sure that the average Atlantan really doesn't care what we do in bed as long as two waiters don't do it while he's having dinner — in fact, I'm positive that the real majority in this country is made up of millions of "Live-and-Let-Live" Joes — but they don't vote!

The supporters of Wallace, Harris, Webb and MacDonald did vote and the people who elected them have scary ideas of what kind of town Atlanta should be. We gays exist here in Atlanta on a precipice — second-class citizens with no political control over our lives.

It's very nice that the Nuclear Test Ban initiatives won and that Reaganomics lost. I'm pleased that a "caring Liberal," Mario Cuomo, won over a millionaire conservative in New York, but I live in Atlanta and I don't feel safe in my condo or in my discos and bars.

The people who see homosexuality as a godless, family-threatening, un-American evil have given a mandate to the Harrises and MacDonalds and Falwells: The fact that Gays are none of those things; The fact that this is not a theocracy; The fact that it's the American family that turns our faggots by the millions; The fact that we gays pay taxes and fight in wars just like non-gay guys do; None of that matters.

Prejudice and hatred are not rational; facts and truth have no meaning to rabid "believers."

Whatever the significance of the election for the rest of the country, we gays here in Atlanta have been put on notice.

The voters have spoken.

A. Wallace

Dear Mom,

Dear Mom,

I know you'll be glad to find out that I finally got all that fingernail polish off. Bruce and Tom came in about ten o'clock the night I wrote you the last letter and, luckily, they had some remover down in their apartment. They couldn't believe that I would be so nervous about going to the store to buy some and said if I had gone down to Ansley Mall, the Woolworth personnel down there are trained to ignore things like that. I only know I'll never wear the stuff again. That is, of course, unless, I know I have remover at home.

Got another letter today from Roxie and she sends her love.

She expects she'll be coming home sometime around New Year's and is starting to look for a place to stay until she can find an apartment of her own. I asked Bruce about whether he would have a place open in this building but he doesn't expect that we'll have anyone moving out since all the leases are filled. But, then again, you can never tell. He told me he wanted to keep this building pretty much gay male anyway but he would look around and see if he could find something nearby.

I couldn't believe my ears. I've never heard Bruce say anything like that. I asked him why, if he wanted only gay men here, he let me and Clifford keep our apartments? He wouldn't answer that. I don't agree with him at all. Especially since Roxie is such a good friend of all of us I don't see how he can just tell her no. I really don't think he could. I hope not anyway.

Well, it'll be nice seeing Roxie again. We've all missed her a lot; even Bruce.

Well, like I wrote in my last letter, I started work again last Saturday night. Never again will I do such a stupid thing; if I can help it, that is. Here I'm supposed to be learning the job and they start me working on the busiest night of the week. Sheesh! I guess in a way it was the best thing to do. I couldn't take my time to memorize everything, I just had to get in there and do it.

I think it's some of the hardest work I've ever done in my life. Halfway through the night I was almost wishing I was back in the tobacco barn. Of course, I know better; this work isn't half that hard, but when you're in the middle of a crowd of trying to clean up, it's hard to remember what anything else is like.

It started off pretty easy; just stocking the bar from the storeroom, filling up the ice bins, and cleaning up a little from the night before. Even after the people started coming in it was pretty slow for awhile and then all of a sudden it was like every Greyhound bus in the state let their passengers off at our door and from then on I can hardly remember the difference between one hour and the next. In fact it surprised the heck out of me when the bar closed.

I seemed to have gotten through the night OK, though. I didn't get hurt, even when I dropped that case of beer on my foot (I hope they don't make me pay for it; there were only two bottles left) and the bartenders were pretty good to me after work, too.

It's nice, too, having a little cash on hand each night after work. I have to watch it, though. That first night all of us went out to another bar after work to sort of celebrate my finding another job and I spent every penny I made that night. I must have really got snookered, too, because I didn't even go home that evening. In fact, I didn't know where I was when I woke up. All I know, is that I woke up at some guy's apartment (I didn't know him from Adam), and we were both asleep on the living-room floor. I got up and dressed real quick trying not to wake him and got out of there as fast as I could. It took me a hour to find a bus and get back to the bar where I had left my car. The only lucky thing about the evening, I guess, is that I didn't try to drive home in the condition I was in. I'm glad, too, 'cause I didn't have to go into work until after noon. I guess this kind of job is great if you like to party after work.

Well, there's really a lot more to tell you but I've got to run now so I can get to work. It's going to take a lot of getting used to, going to work and getting off so late, but I'm going to stick it out. It shouldn't be too hard anyway; all the guys at work are really friendly and helpful. They'll help me get through it.

I hope everything is doing alright down home, I 'still haven't had a letter from you and I'm not kidding when I say I'm getting a little worried. Well, be good anyway and tell Pop, Hi, for me.

The Foods and Wines of Warpwood

by Bernice Cross Tarbuns

(Of the Decatur by-the-sea Tarbuns)

Do you know how difficult it is to write on toilet paper with a mascara pencil? I'm locked in Priscilla Upright's bathroom because I'm being chased by a deranged killer parrot, and lord only knows where Priscilla is. I'm going to stuff her face in a blender! But I digress.

Here's what happened. Several months ago an evil hairdresser friend of Priscilla's was leaving town for greener pastures and talked her into adopting his parrot. The damn thing's name is "Nipper." She should have known better. So, "Mr. Fluff" dashes by Priscilla's place in a whirl of tears and kisses and deposits Nipper and his gilded cage in Priscilla's living room and flees for the airport. I should have been suspicious about the whole affair because he was extremely vague about his final destination, refusing to divulge even the hemisphere he was headed for.

Of course, Priscilla has a new project of some sort every other day and saw the whole thing as a new adventure. She had great visions of teaching Nipper to talk and do wondrous tricks to amaze and delight dinner guests. Little did she know that it was her that Nipper had planned for dinner. You see, Nipper bites. When I say "bites," what I really mean is damage something akin to a negligent farm animal that accidentally strays into the path of a McCormack reaper.

Nipper hates people. No matter how nice you are to him he attacks any human extremity and part that is thrust into his cage for any reason. He bites when you feed him, he bites when you give him water and he bites when you clean his cage. Not only does he not talk, but he makes a sound that can only be compared to the death throes of a beached whale. And he's ugly.

We tried everything. Priscilla even secured the services of an animal psychologist but to no avail. The psychologist suggested poison after several attempts to relate to this horrid bird. Nipper seemed to thrive on the poison and would gobble it up greedily. We were amazed.

At one point Priscilla decided to throw Nipper, cage and all, into her pool but the damn thing could swim and kept the cage afloat until the neighbors complained to the police about the noise. The police suggested that Priscilla could be arrested and charged for cruelty to an animal and so back into the house went Nipper.

Well, to make a long story short, Priscilla called me this morning in a rage about the umpteenth pair of leather gloves Nipper had shredded and she had decided to gas him. Her plan was to put him into the oven, turn off the pilot light, open all the windows and put Verdi's "Requiem" on the stereo and let dear ole Nipper go see God. (She has the recording with Leontyne Price and Juss Buoerling. Wonderful!) But I digress. I was to come for a celebration lunch at twelve thirty.

When I arrived at Priscilla's place I used my key to let myself in. The moment I stepped inside I was almost overwhelmed by the smell of raw gas. The place was filled with it and I couldn't hear a sound. I put my handkerchief over my face and ran for the kitchen and turned off all the gas. Then I heard the front door slam. Naturally I assumed it was Priscilla returning. As it turned out, she was leaving.

I then decided to open the over door and view the deceased. That was my big mistake, because Nipper came screeching out and attacked me like a guilty nun on a communion wafer. I started screaming and dashed for the bathroom and locked myself in. I can hear him now outside the door. I wish to hell I had not seen "The Birds."

I don't know where Priscilla is and I'm writing my column on toilet tissue. Unless I can find a way out I may just miss my first deadline. This time Priscilla has gone too far.

FOR THE MAN OF DISCRETION

Dear Diamond Lil,

Does your adventure end where so-called normalcy begins? Have you been making futile attempts at being "normal"? Are you wondering why these efforts aren't working? Have you considered yourself unique? Did you know that everyone is? Did you unload on your person a galley of guilt after "gay" sex? Or, did you "dump it" on your partner? Are you blaming others for YOUR shortcomings? YOUR mistakes? YOUR failures? Tell me, why have you entered the clone syndrome? Surely not to become a "regular" person? Your "average" person? Your base, oops, "basic" person? Why? Have you considered being YOU? Why not? Isadora Duncan did! If you're feeling "a miss" (sorry, Freudian slip) amiss and not in kilter at present and desire other input, please write Dear Diamond Lil, c/o R & R Publications, Inc., 729 Piedmont Ave. NE, Atlanta, GA 30308; for we here at CRUISE do not want you sitting alone out there in a straight-backed wooden kitchen chair playing the role of Whistler's mother!

Dear Diamond Lil, I'm employed on the evening shift at a lab here in Atlanta and recently a girl that I knew from 15 years ago came to help out part-time. I liked her then, although there were no romantic notions on my part at that time. However, I feel that with this passage of time I would like her even better. I noticed that her card bears the same last name as it did years ago, so I assume she might have remained single.

My specific problem is: How do

I ask her out without her thinking I have romantic intentions? I'm feeling I would like to have her as a friend to just share mutual interests and conversation. If anything else were to develop, that would be fine; but I really do not want her to get the wrong idea about my intentions.

"In a Quandary"

Dear "In a Quandary,"

Projection and paranoia about what she's thinking is, and you know it, too speculative for you to bother with — let alone worry about. Why not tell her you're interested in acquiring some new FRIENDSHIPS — male and female — to expand interests and activities, and that you feel you're not ready for romantic involvement of any kind at the moment, and that you prefer to keep things on a lighter basis with everyone for the time being. Let her know that "making friends" (sorry, no pun intended here) is your primary objective at this time. I won't be surprised if she finds the idea quite suitable.

*Love on a "friendly" basis,
Diamond Lil*

Dear Miss Diamond,

Today I find myself very much alone and at loose ends, and with the on-coming cold weather at hand, I thought it an appropriate time to write you a letter, as I do enjoy reading your column very much.

You see, Miss Lil, I'm nearing forty years of age; and I really don't feel I've gotten my shit (pardon my French) together. I've been moving in one young trick after another to keep me company, and recently I've come to the conclusion that I'm one big nervous wreck and still alone! I put up with their rip-offs, their long-distance telephone calls, and their girlfriends in exchange for their second-rate affection and mental abuse. I have to stay crooked half the time to stand it; and furthermore, the doctor has ordered me to cut down on my alcohol intake.

Do you know of any answers or solutions that I might try to remedy the situation? I feel that if I give up these tricks, then I'll be giving up life — whatever's left of it. I really feel I've "had it" physically and mentally, not to mention emotionally. Just what is an old worn-out queen to do?

Wit's End

Dear "End,"

So many of us think we are taking the easier way out by living IN THE PROBLEM! If you think your growth is stunted in this situation, then it's time to grow up and be a big girl now and make some changes. We can continue to grow and improve until they put us six feet under. Ask yourself this question: "Do I wish to remain in this same quagmire right on out?" We "take" what's familiar, and we certainly fear change — since we are creatures of habit. Maybe some of your old habits aren't working so well for you at this time and need to be dumped. Your biggest enemy is FEAR; and your biggest allies are RISKS. Take them! share your thoughts and your problems with friends around your age, and get some feedback from them. GET INVOLVED and UNFOLD YOUR ARMS! Only YOU, my dear, can navigate your ship.

*Love with open arms,
Diamond Lil*

HOTLANTA VOLLEYBALL THANKS SPONSORS

The Third Annual Invitational Volleyball Tournament is past history. Its smashing success was a result of your hard work and support.

We, the members of the Hotlanta Volleyball Association, wish to thank you for that support in making this tournament the best ever.

Future plans call for Hotlanta Volleyball to host the 1983 National Invitational Tournament to be held over the Memorial Day Weekend. Since Atlanta has never attempted to host a gay volleyball tournament of this magnitude, preparations have already begun for this major sporting event. To be a true success, we will need you continued support and generosity that you, our sponsors, have contributed. Please keep up the good work.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN FILM FEST AT RHODES THEATRE

As actor, director, screenwriter, producer and composer, Sir Charles Spencer Chaplin was perhaps the best-known film personality in all the world, and his "Little Tramp" character is as popular today as when "The Tramp" was released in 1915. The Rhodes Theater salutes the comic genius of Charlie Chaplin in a special five-week festival on Sunday and Monday nights in November and December. The festival will begin on November 21st and run through December 20th.

The retrospective, consisting of nine features and five shorts, will present such early Chaplin classics as "The Gold Rush" and "The Circus," as well as later, lesser-seen works as "The Great Dictator," Chaplin's brutal parody of Hitler; "A King in New York," his unflinching satire of the American way; and the bitter black comedy "Monsieur Verdoux." Rounding out the festival will be three works that are considered to be among Chaplin's greatest: "Modern Times," "The Kid," and "City Lights."

The Rhodes Theater is located at 1500 Peachtree Street in Atlanta.

A complete schedule with program notes and show times is available at the box office and at selected local businesses.

The schedule for "The Charlie Chaplin Film Festival":

"The Kid" and "The Idle Class" - Sunday, Nov. 21st, 4:00 & 7:30;

release of their fifth A&M album, "Special Forces." Their current tour in support of this album will extend for a year and it is expected that they will be seen by approximately one million concert goers. Needless to say the crowds will enjoy the high-energy rock performance .38 Special is famous for delivering.

To add to all this excitement, after a two-year hiatus, Eddie Money will lend his exclusive brand of rock to the tour as the opening act for .38 Special. He is currently touring in support of his fourth Columbia Records release, "No Control."

'HEPTAVAX-B' IN GOOD SUPPLY

West Point, PA, 11-5-82 - Supplies of "Heptavax-B," the new hepatitis B vaccine, are now available in adequate quantity to vaccinate the people considered to be at greatest risk for contracting the serious liver infection.

Merck, Sharpe & Dohme, the developer of the vaccine, announced today that no shortages have occurred and none are expected at this time. At the time of the United States introduction in July, the company had warned that large initial orders could lead to "spot shortages" since the vaccine wasn't being stockpiled but moved directly into distribution channels upon government certification.

The initial concern that unusually large requests for the vaccine might conceivably lead to short supplies in certain locations was largely based on the lengthy and complex manufacturing and testing process, which requires sixty-five weeks.

More than 600,000 doses of "Heptavax-B" have been distributed to date.

A cost-effectiveness evaluation of the vaccine published in "The New England Journal of Medicine" in September shows that it would be most beneficial to screen everyone for immunity to hepatitis B virus in the male homosexual population — which has a high prevalence of hepatitis B and is at high risk of contracting the disease — and to vaccinate only those without evidence of immunity as a result of prior exposure to the virus.

Costs are lowered by screening homosexuals first to eliminate the large number of persons within the population who already have been exposed to the virus and, therefore, would not benefit from immunization. In that way, only persons who need the vaccine would receive it, while persons who already are immune need to bear only the lower expense of the screening process.

The authors of the study reported that, for surgical residents, by-passing the screening process and simply vaccinating every member of the group would yield the greatest savings in medical costs. Pre-vaccination screening would eliminate fewer members of this group, which has a low prevalence of the disease but faces a relatively high risk of exposure in the hospital setting. The net cost of screening would simply be added to the cost of the vaccine for those persons screened and found out not to have immunity from prior exposure to the virus.

Neither screening nor vaccinating was recommended for the general population because prevalence of hepatitis B and the risk of encountering the virus both are extremely low in this group. The almost negligible medical benefit derived would not justify the cost of either option.

Also in September, the Federal government's Interagency Group to Monitor Vaccine Development, Production and Usage reported that its finding support statements by another advisory committee that the vaccine is safe and efficacious. The report was published in the "Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report" of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control.

The group reviewed available data on the vaccine in response to requests for additional information and concluded that: 1) immediate side effects are minimal after receipt of... vaccine; 2) no long-term reactions have been reported; 3) the purification and inactivation process is known to inactivate representatives of all known groups of animal viruses; 4) each lot is safety tested in primates; 5) no known cases of hepatitis B or non-A/non-B hepatitis have been transmitted by the vaccine and no known occurrence of AIDS (acquired immune deficiency disease syndrome) have been associated with the vaccine."

Representatives from the Centers for Disease Control, the Food and Drug Administration and the National Institutes of Health made up the inter-agency group.
